Charles Kirol will join Peloton Interactive, Inc. as Chief Operating Officer in the newly created role.

operational excellence across all aspects of Peloton's business.

Kirol previously served as Executive Vice President, Chief Global Operations and Technology Officer at iRobot Corporation, a global consumer robot company offering home innovation products. Previously, he was Senior Vice President of Global Operations for Sensata Technologies, a leading supplier of sensing, electrical protection, control and power management solutions. Kirol has also held executive roles in global operations, sourcing and supply chain management at Stanley Black & Decker and GE Capital. He is a long-standing naval officer, having served on active duty for more than 16 years. Kirol currently holds the rank of Rear Admiral in the US Navy Reserves, where he is one of the senior-most procurement, logistics, and supply corps officers, and presently leads a team of 3,600 logistics professionals.

"With his extensive manufacturing and operational experience across both the private and public sectors, Charles has a proven track record of leadership that will be invaluable to Peloton as we continue to transform our business and work to empower millions of Peloton Members to live fit, strong, long, and happy," said Stern. "His vision, world-class understanding of manufacturing, and exceptional ability to inspire teams make him uniquely qualified to help lead our operations."

As part of the COO transition, current Chief Supply Chain Officer Andy Rendich will step down from his role and remain at the company as an advisor through the end of Peloton's fiscal year. Rendich has played an essential role in both streamlining and elevating the company's operations and supply chain management during a critical chapter in its evolution.

"I'm grateful to Andy for his steady hand and unwavering commitment to the company the past several years," Stern added. "He and the team he built for Peloton have been instrumental in guiding our supply chain through unprecedented challenges. We know Andy will continue to do great things wherever he goes next, just as he has done for Peloton, and we are lucky to have his continued support during the next few months."

Peloton will also be launching a search for a Chief Information Officer. The role will manage and oversee Peloton's information technology strategy, operations, and infrastructure and report to Charles Kirol.

Additionally, current Chief Emerging Business Officer Dion Camp Sanders has been named Chief Commercial Officer. This designation recognizes Sanders's central role in returning Peloton to growth, including his responsibility for first-party retail, inside sales, third-party retail, bike rental and sales of pre-owned refurbished equipment, international strategy and operations, B2B channels, Precor, M&A, and business development.
